1: Roth--71-72 (No date) 1890 Tasmanians
116, 423, 361

"We have no direct evidence to show that they were ever in the habit of meeting in council, to discuss matters concerning the tribes. The boundaries of various hunting-grounds belonging to each tribe were respected, and, as we shall see, (1) trespass was equal to a declaration of war; [72] but being an entirely nomadic race, 'they had no permanent villages, and, accordingly, no individual property in land' (West, p. 20)."
